
        The social work field trains professionals to handle almost everything — except staying safe when things go sideways. The NASW code of ethics is solid on principles. It is silent on what to do when a client becomes a threat.

        GoCo Dynamics fills that gap. Founded by Angelo Coates, MSW candidate and Brazilian Jiu-Jitsu practitioner, GoCo delivers survivability skills built specifically for the helping professions — grounded in the do-no-harm framework and designed for real field situations.

        This is not self-defense theater. It is situational awareness, verbal de-escalation, and physical readiness — in that order, every time. The goal is never to fight. The goal is to get home.

        GoCo is the professional arm. The mission runs through the Garrison Project, a youth mentorship nonprofit built on the same philosophy: build it before you need it.

        The Garrison Project is a nonprofit mentorship program built specifically for fatherless young men. Not another talking circle. Not a feelings journal. A structured environment where boys learn to build character, earn leadership, and develop real resilience — on the mat and in the classroom.

        The program pairs jiu-jitsu training with concrete life skills: getting an ID, navigating college applications, mock interviews, financial basics, and academic support. Success is measured in grades, attendance, and outcomes — not feelings expressed in a session.
